This is a genuine and unbiased attestation to this music icon's ingenuity in creating world-class music that has quickly driven praise and popularity beyond the genre.

Here is what Franco Esteve says of his creative musical compositions: "For me, composing music is a process of exploration, which is why I'm so drawn to it. There are so many places to visit and explore and express. A lot of my music is composed as an expression of my short films, like soundtracks, as a live entity within a story. Sometimes, the music gets drawn from life itself."

"The Wait," is a classical style, story-driven piece of music that reflects waiting and anticipation, characteristic of humanity – that of unrealized longing for the satisfaction that remains elusive. It got written out of insomnia and the permanent incapacity to sleep. Esteve here recreates something he struggled with throughout his life. He drew a lot of ideas that flowed from those hours he fought to fall asleep but could not. "The Wait" is a direct product of that anxious waiting for sleep to come, while time ticked away, without the realization of that expectation – a realization that as the time ticked away, it became apparent that sleep would not come.

These moments were reflected by Esteve's employment of varying orchestral elements in the creation of "The Wait" - a great creative attempt with the violin's pizzicato ticking away, as other elements creep in," and "the mind races in the darkness."
